

EX-SENATOR UNDERWOOD DIES TODAY

Distinguished Southern Solon, Leader Of His Party, Succumbs.

Washington, Jan. 25 (AP).—Oscar W. Underwood, 66, former senator from Alabama and a powerful figure in American political life for 20 years, died at his home in Woodlawn, Virginia, today after a long illness.

A cerebral hemorrhage early in December, a stroke of paralysis two weeks later from which he rallied and a fatal relapse a few days ago brought his distinguished career to an end.

Senator Underwood, noted for his leadership of the Democratic party in the house and senate, took up his residence at Woodlawn, Va., near the Mount Vernon home of George Washington, after he had decided to retire from the senate. His health had been bad for many months although he himself had made light of it.

Leads Party In 1911
Underwood assumed leadership in his party in the house in 1911. The tariff bill passed during the Wilson administration bore his name and he was placed in nomination for the Democratic presidential nomination at several of the party's national conventions.

Alabama finally placed him in the senate and during his service there he became party leader and was one of the American delegates to the Washington Arms conference and bore a large part of the burden in the senate fight to have the treaty drawn up at that conference ratified. He retired voluntarily from the senate, declining to let his name go before the voters in 1926.

Opposed Bryan
One of the towering figures in congress during his day, Oscar W. Underwood attained national prominence through unusual qualities of statesmanship and a marked capacity as a leader.

Concededly one of the ablest men of his party, his name was brought forward repeatedly for the Democratic presidential nomination, but geographical boundaries were regarded as barring the way despite the fact that he received much of his support from the North and East. Although born in Kentucky and reared in the northwest, he was wholly associated with the South since all his public service had been as a representative and senator from Alabama.

Unlike those of some of his contemporaries, his career was marked by little of sensationalism but his long public life nevertheless was not wholly without its dramatic moments. He was the first of the young Democrats to break lances with William Jennings Bryan when the commoner still was a commanding force in the councils of the party. Their differences arose over the Underwood tariff, and the stand taken by Mr. Underwood required a courage which again was demonstrated a few years later when in the then prohibition south he met and vanquished the senate Richmond Pearson Hobson, a leader of the dry cause and a national hero of Merriam fame.

The senator's friends declared it was this same courage that led him to publicly denounce the Ku Klux Klan in 1924 when he was seeking the presidential nomination.

Pilot Nose - Dives To Catch Falling Jumper, But Fails
Newhall, Cal., Jan. 25 (AP).—The spectacular death of a girl parachutist in a 2,000 foot leap from an airplane here caused a temporary halt here today in the production of a motion picture thriller in which Ruth Elder, ocean flyer, was being featured.

A desperate attempt by Jim Granger, pilot of the plane from which Miss Leta Wichart, 23, jumped, to nose dive under her and catch her in the cockpit of his ship failed apparently by only a few feet.

BANK DIVIDES STOCK 5 FOR 1

Gettysburg National Bank Directors Move To Increase Number Of Shareholders.

I. L. Taylor, president of the Gettysburg National bank, this morning announced that the board of directors had unanimously decided to recommend a change of par value of the capital stock from $50 par at present to a new par of $10 per share. This change was decided upon by the board of directors of the Gettysburg National bank, at their regular meeting held last Tuesday. The decision is recommended to the shareholders of the bank who will meet in special session March 5, for the purpose of considering and voting upon the following resolution:

"That, under the provisions of Section 5139 U. S. R. S., as amended February 25, 1927, the capital stock of this association be divided into shares of $10 each."

Receives Permission
Mr. Taylor said that permission to divide the capital stock into a five-for-one ratio had been granted by the comptroller of the currency of the federal government and that it appeared certain the action of the board of directors would meet with the approval of the shareholders when they meet early next month.

The local banker explained that the new decision would have the effect of exchanging one share of $50 par value stock certificates now held for five new $10 par value certificates.

The reduction of $50 par value stock certificates will mean a greater distribution of capital among a greater number of people, the ultimate purpose of the new change as adopted by many other banks throughout the country.

The last public sale of capital stock brought $208 (par value $50) which means that under the new arrangement the new stock, $10 par value, might be expected to bring $40 per share or better.

Fried, With Florida's Crew, Battles Gale, Enroute to N. Y.

Commander Of American Expects To Reach Port Tomorrow—Wireless Thrilling Tale Of Rescue Of Freighter's Men.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Thirty-two men, the crew of the Italian freighter Florida, storm wrecked 800 miles at sea, and rescued by the United States liner America, are enroute to New York.

Capt. George Fried, of the America, sent a message to the United States Lines at five o'clock Thursday afternoon estimating that it would take him until "eight Saturday" to reach the Ambrose channel lightship. Line officials interpreted this to mean eight o'clock Saturday morning, which would bring the America to quarantine about nine and to her pier by 11 o'clock.

Northwest Gale Blowing
The message also reported that a northeast gale was still blowing. Six of the Florida's crew were seriously injured, four others were very ill and all were exhausted from their fight for life. But they were alive, and that was almost more than anyone would have thought could be their lot who could have seen their plight Wednesday as Captain Fried described it Thursday in his first account of the rescue in a dispatch to the Associated Press.

Three years ago Captain Fried, then commander of the President Roosevelt, proved himself a colorful writer of sea epics when he

AGENTS MUST BE ASSISTED IN DOG CASES

Those Violating Or Interfering With Dog Law Cannot Recover Damages.

No person who violates or interferes in any way with the enforcement of the Pennsylvania Dog Law can recover damages caused by dogs to his or her livestock or poultry according to a recent opinion of far-reaching significance given by the Department of Justice to the bureau of animal industry, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

After explaining that the "owner" of a dog is any person who harbors a dog, has it in his care or permits it to remain on or about any premises occupied by him, the opinion points out that any person who keeps an unlicensed dog, permits a dog to run at large, or does not have his dog properly tagged, is violating the law and cannot recover damages when his livestock or poultry is killed or injured by dogs.

Should not Obstruct
It was stated further that if the person making the damage claim withholds or suppresses testimony to obstruct the dog law enforcement agents in their efforts to locate the dog responsible for the damage, he will be deprived of his right to recover.

The spirit, purpose and intent of the law is that the person making the claim for damages shall assist, not obstruct, the agent in finding the dog doing the damage, the opinion said.

The opinion also makes clear that when the person who presents a claim for damages knows the owner of a dog but tells the appraisers and agent that the owner is unknown, and it can subsequently be proven that he does know, then he should be indicted and convicted of perjury.

Must Testify
"The secretary of agriculture is also advised that when a person making a claim for damages refuses to permit members of his family to testify when called as witnesses, the claim should be denied."

In line with this opinion, the bureau of animal industry will make careful investigations in all cases where the faintest shadow of suspicion exists of collusion of or of want of openness and fairness in giving information regarding damage caused by dogs.

Should Render Aid
"The time is definitely past when any person in Pennsylvania can violate or interfere with the full enforcement of the dog law and yet recover damages caused by dogs to his or her property," bureau officials said. "Those who expect to recover compensation for such losses should be in the front ranks of the dog law observers."

Fried Tells of Rescue
His story, as sent by wireless to the Associated Press, follows: "On our homeward-bound voyage we experienced a succession of westerly and northwesterly gales, with a very high, rough sea, accompanied by heavy snow and hail squalls."

"On January 22 we received S O S calls from the American steamer Danneida and the Italian steamer Florida, both vessels giving their positions in latitude 38 north and longitude 60 west."

"We ascertained then that several vessels were in their vicinity, but only one had a radio compass and the distressed vessel could not be located, so we decided to proceed to their assistance about noon January 22. We were then 350 miles north of their reported positions."

"We were covered with ice in freezing weather and having violent snow and hail squalls, with a heavy gale. Chief Radio Operator Nelson Smith was stationed at the radio compass and took bearings continuously."

FISHER PARDONS HAROLD KILMORE

Youth Placed On Probation Here Gets Opportunity To Enter West Point Academy.

J. Harold Kilmore, of Baltimore, who asked Governor Fisher to grant him a pardon in order to clear his record of thefts in Adams and York counties so that he might become eligible for appointment to the West Point Military academy, was granted that pardon Thursday.

Kilmore on August 2, 1927, pleaded guilty to four counts of larceny in the Adams county court. He never served a day in jail but was put on probation by Judge Donald P. McPherson on condition that he would pay the costs, make restitution for property stolen and return to Baltimore and there continue his studies. Kilmore complied faithfully with the court order.

Prepares for Academy
Kilmore became acquainted in York and Adams counties because his parents moved from Hanover to Baltimore. From February to June, 1926, he worked on the farm of an uncle, a Mr. Little, a mile east of Hanover.

Kilmore is 21 years of age. He is a student at the Army and Navy preparatory school in Baltimore where he has a good record. Because of his excellence in military training he now has a chance for appointment to West Point, but needed a clean record to be admitted there.

Belt Is Used
The spanking took place when Robertson was being cross-examined. Producing the belt with which the child had testified she was whipped, the prosecutor directed the foster father to show the jury "how you whipped Betty."

Wrapping the buckle around his wrist, the witness "spanked" her three times. A little sob which Betty emitted at the first touch changed to a genuine cry at the others and she ran to her seat in the first row of the courtroom.

It was ten minutes before a woman attendant was able to quiet her.

BANK CASE IS BEFORE COURT

Three Gettysburg And One New Oxford Banks Involved In Equity Action.

An equity action, which has been in litigation in the Franklin county courts for several years and which involves the three Gettysburg banks, one at New Oxford and a fifth at Gaithersburg, Maryland, was argued before Judge Watson R. Davison in Chambersburg Thursday, by Attorney George Ross Hull, Harrisburg, and Attorney Edwin D. Strite, Chambersburg.

Banks Start Action
The action was instituted by the First National bank of Gettysburg, the Gettysburg National bank, the Citizens' Trust company of Gettysburg, the Farmers' and Merchants' bank of New Oxford and the First National bank of Gaithersburg, Maryland, against the Wolf Co. to have set aside action of Wolf Co. directors in issuing and selling preferred stock to H. G. Wolf, the president, and issuance of stock dividends. The banks claimed that their rights as stockholders were infringed in that they were not notified and given an opportunity to share in the stock issue.

History of Case
The history of the case shows that after the Wolf Co. and Aug. Wolf & Co. had been adjudicated bankrupts in 1907 the companies were reorganized. At that time the banks were creditors and took preferred stock to cover their claims. The action of the company in selling treasury stock to H. G. Wolf was taken in 1921, it was charged.

Stock holdings of the banks were listed as follows: First National bank of Gettysburg, 330; Gettysburg National bank, 83; Citizens' Trust company of Gettysburg, 27; Farmers' and Merchants' bank of New Oxford, 35; First National bank of Gaithersburg, 65.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 25 (AP).—Of all the places that 7-year-old Betty Hinkle might think would be chosen for a spanking, the last would be a courtroom.

The bond for the state has been set at $20,000. Both bonds are the same as those of the previous treasurer, the late George W. Reichle.

Although all the technicalities in connection with Mr. Spangler's appointment are expected to be concluded Saturday, the appointee said he will not be ready to transact business in the treasurer's office until Monday morning.

Mr. Spangler today said he had received a letter from Governor Fisher notifying him of the appointment, and asked for a letter of acceptance. The letter of acceptance has been forwarded to the governor by Mr. Spangler.

One Condemned Man In Sing Sing Chamber
Ossining, N. Y., Jan. 25 (AP).—A triple execution last night left the sing sing death house, for the first time in 2 years, with but a single occupant today.

The three men who went to their death were members of a Brooklyn gang known as the "Pants bandits" because they always took away the trousers of their victims to hamper pursuit.

Some of these defendants may enter pleas of guilty before their cases are called, which would lighten the district attorney's burden for the week, but at noon today no such pleas had been received.

After the criminal list is disposed of, two cases are listed for trial on the civil docket. Both actions were continued from previous terms, and both may be disposed of or continued without going before a jury.

Sidelights of New York

By Richard G. Masseck

New York—Dance halls are to be made safe for New York's womanhood. A squad of Commissioner Whalen's patrolwomen will see to that.

But Rose of Delancey street wants no "woman cop" around the Aurora Gardens, where she dances nightly for her cakes and coffee. Rose says she is able to take care of herself; she is afraid police interference might scare the dollars away.

Rose formerly was "hostess" in a Broadway dance hall—a taxi dancer whose companionship in one-steps and waltzes could be had for $2.80 an hour. Out of every 35 cent dance ticket she turned in, Rose collected 25 cents. It was fairly good pay, Rose thought, and occasionally some "lonely egg with plenty of cash" would hire her for "company" on a night club expedition. Everything, of course, was strictly "on the up and up."

But the night club racket clumped, the big-money customers quit coming to the dance hall, unescorted "amateurs" were willing partners for the young fellows who did come, and hostessing in polite surroundings became less lucrative, sometimes hardly paying for the stockings Rose wore out.

"One Of The Girls"

Rose, therefore, went up the fringe of Harlem, to Aurora Gardens, which is not exactly the name of the cramped, dingy, dimly-lighted hall where she now is "one of the girls." "All proceeds of next Thursday's dance will go to the girls," reads a sign.

"The girls" are 18 in number, and of indefinite ages. They have no competition from "amateurs," for girls not employed in the place are barred. Usually about 60 men are lined up at the railing around the floor. When not dancing, it is the girls' duty to promote business. "Dontcha want to buy some tickets?" wheedles Rose. "Aw, come on!"

Six tickets sell for a dollar, and entitle the purchaser to 12 dances. It sounds like a lot, but "12 dances" means about 15 minutes on the floor. The orchestra plays, on without stopping, the drummer rapping on the edge of the drums to signify that a new dance has begun. Rose keeps count and when the six tickets have been used up, steers her partner to the gate.

Dance Shop

There is no gaiety, no laughter, but the feeling that one has come to buy diversion, like candy, from an impersonal saleswoman whose smile means nothing. The two burly "bouncers" on the floor might be a pair of floorwalkers.

Rose makes about the same percentage on the tickets that she made down on Broadway, and averages about $45 for a week of seven nights' dancing. Most of it, she says, she takes home to her mother; her own sleazy, East Side clothes indicate that she spends little on herself.

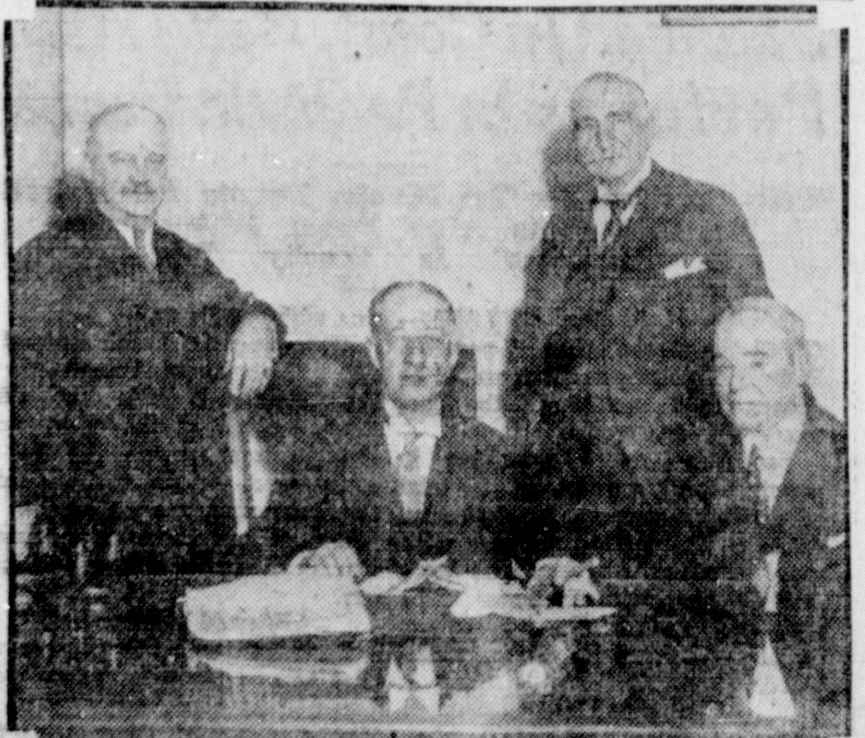

So perhaps Rose is not as "hard" as she looks, although she says she can handle any "fresh sap" and she emphatically does not want a "woman cop" around to "cramp her style."

FIREMEN LOSE TO K. C. 43-21

Smoke-Eaters Fail To Maintain High Speed Of Previous Games And Meet Defeat.

The Knights of Columbus basketball team of Harrisburg defeated the Gettysburg firemen for the second time this season on the City Knights of Columbus floor, Harrisburg, Thursday evening by a 43 to 21 score. At no time after the start of the second quarter did the Gettysburg team threaten the Harrisburg team. The game was played before a large crowd of spectators that filled the hall to its capacity.

Russ Tuckey and Peduzzi were the stars for the losers while McCarvel, Hummel and Dailey starred for the city team. Both teams used their entire squads in the game.

The game was even in the first quarter of play with Tuckey and Dailey leading their respective teams. In the second quarter the Knights of Columbus cagers collected enough points to gain an 18 to 10 lead at the half. During the last half the city team outplayed the visitors except in parts of the game where the Gettysburg cagers attempted a rally. The score at the end of the third quarter was 28 to 16 in favor of the Harrisburg team.

MAY ABOLISH 35-MI. LIMIT

Motor Code Provides New Speed Regulation On Open Highways; Tax Is Issued.

Harrisburg, Jan. 25 (AP).—Out of the mass of problems already before the general assembly, motor taxation emerged today to occupy a post of front rank importance.

Two district happenings were responsible for moving the question of revenue for the state highway department into the limelight. One was the notice served by State Treasurer S. S. Lewis that he, "was unable to understand" why an increase in either the gasoline tax or automobile license fees was necessary and the other, the demand of councilmen and other officials from a number of cities made to Governor Fisher for a 50 per cent return of the motor license money collected by the state in those municipalities.

Opposed to each other as they were, these two developments added to the complicated nature of the question. It was also learned today that an entirely new motor code abolishing the 35 mile speed limit on the open highway among other changes was being contemplated for submission to the legislature, by the highway department.

"MY MAN," starring Fannie Brice, is a Warner Bros. pictorialization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
Fanny Brice is raising her brother, Phil, and her sister, Audrey, for whom she makes every sacrifice. But Audrey leaves home "to live her own life." In the costume of a "discovered" by Lazarus, art director for Waldo, theatrical producer, who takes her to Waldo. During the audition Fanny learns of Audrey's interest in Waldo. Heartbroken, she falls in love. Then Fanny helps a man, Tom, who is broke, and, believing he loves her, precipitates an engagement. Audrey returns and Tom becomes infatuated. On the eve of the wedding Fanny sees Tom kissing Audrey. Tom and Audrey disappear, leaving Fanny desolate.

Of Audrey and Tom she had been nothing since that evening before the wedding when she had asked them both to leave her. She had had a note from Audrey, however, telling her that she and Tom had been married, and asking Fanny to send their belongings to an address in the city. There was no mention of anything that had happened, no apology or explanation. Merely a statement that they wanted their clothes.

So Fanny left Thorne's.

carefully and put away between 100s of tissue paper in a drawer. As with Fanny felt that she had buried something of herself. Sometimes she was tempted to take it out and look at it again, but she forced the thought from her mind, knowing that the sight of the gown would only bring back the memory of all those events she was trying so hard to forget.

Autumn came once more with its riot of colors, its crisp, bright air, and changed slowly into the lavender-gray of November. Waldo was ready with a new show, and Lazarus had debated in his mind about asking Fanny to come for an audition. But in the end he had decided that the time was not yet ripe, and so he waited patiently.

The first flurry of snow came and went, leaving the streets damp and slippery. Hurrying figures now began to throng the department stores. Suggestions for Christmas gifts were in order and signs in the subways and trams advised the public once again to consider doing its Christmas shopping early. And then one day Lazarus stopped at Thorne's to talk to Fanny. Ostensibly he was arranging about some costumes.

"Thought I'd just say hello," he greeted the girl, perching himself on the corner of her work table.

"Oh, how do you do, Mr. Lazarus," Fanny stopped her sewing and greeted her visitor.

"How's everything going?" "Fine!" There was something of the old ring to her voice, now, something happier about her appearance.

"Look here, Fanny," he'd taken to calling her Fanny ever since the night of the party—"how about coming over to Waldo's office and trying a couple of songs?" "Oh, Mr. Lazarus, but—why, I don't know—I made such a mess of it that other time—I don't know—" she hesitated.

"But you've done a lot of work since then. Oh, I know, my spies tell me everything," he laughed. "I know how hard you've been practicing. Besides, Waldo's anxious to hear you again. He says that other time you were there he was a little upset, and perhaps he didn't do you justice."

men a matter of fact Waldo had said nothing of the sort, but Lazarus was nothing if not diplomatic.

He, himself, had talked Waldo into hearing the girl again. He could do more with the producer than anyone around the office.

"Personally, I'd like you to try it," Lazarus went on, leaning a little closer to the girl and making his tone more confidential. "I think you've got the stuff in you that's going to make a great comedienne—let alone a good actress. I've been telling Waldo this, and now it's sort of up to you to make good for my sake, don't you see?"

"You're too kind, Mr. Lazarus," Fanny blushed but, nevertheless, she was pleased at his belief in her. "Of course I'll try it, if you really want me to."

And so it was settled that Fanny was to come to the producer's office when Lazarus sent for her. And now she went about almost happy. She had a new interest; something to take her mind off of her personal worries. This time she had a feeling that she was going to make good, if for no other reason than to justify Lazarus' kindness and thoughtfulness.

Christmas came and went. Fanny and Phil celebrated and considered that they had a marvelous time. A huge box of candy and a flowering plant had come from Lazarus, and Fanny was as surprised and as pleased as though it had been the most costly gift in the world. To Tom and Audrey she had mailed a gift, sending it to the address Audrey had given her. A card came in return, and that was all.

Then shortly after the beginning of the new year, Fanny received a letter from Lazarus asking her to come to Waldo's office for an audition. She went. Waldo raved. The girl was a knockout; a find; a new star. He talked salary and contracts in terms that amazed the girl and made her head swim. Without the aid of Lazarus she would have been completely lost. But he advised her and told her what to do and how to do it.

But there were more exciting days to come. Fanny left Thorne's dressmaking establishment as a seamstress and returned to it to be fitted for costumes for the forthcoming production. It seemed unbelievable to the girl. Sometimes she awoke in the middle of the night and sat bolt upright in bed, thinking that everything was a dream, and it would take her several minutes to convince herself that it was all real—almost too real.

There were the long weeks of rehearsal when everybody seemed ready to drop from exhaustion and sheer nervous strain. Waldo went about smoking one black cigar after another, chewing the ends until he flung them away in disgust and lighted a fresh one. There were days when he shouted and bellowed at everybody; days when nothing seemed to go right, when nobody managed to do anything right. Those were the days when Lazarus, no matter how wrinkled his brow was with worry, would take Fanny to one side in the darkened theatre and try to smooth things out for her.

"Don't pay any attention to Waldo," he'd whisper. "He doesn't mean anything when he shouts at you that way. It's only his method of rehearsing."

"Yes, I know," Fanny would answer, and try to look very brave, even when she was close to tears.

"He's going to make a star of you or break a bone doing it. Now don't fail me. You've got the goods all right. You needn't worry."

"I'll do my best." And then Fanny would smile again.

It was true what Lazarus said; Fanny realized that. She had to learn so many, many things. Even how to walk onto the stage and walk off again. And when Waldo decided to create a star, he was not the one to leave the matter to anyone else. He saw to everything personally.

Oh, if one could just walk out and sing and then go off, Fanny thought. It all looked so simple when you saw it being done. It seemed as though no one would need much instruction about such a simple matter. But here, in this pitch black theatre with those bright, glaring lamps that illuminated the stage the only lights in the house, it was another matter. One must learn how to turn around. It was like learning how to walk all over again.

Now she must go every day for a vocal lesson; every day for a dancing lesson; every day for a rehearsal. And with all this to occupy her mind, she had no time to think of the past or brood over her sorrows. She absorbed all instruction as a dry sponge absorbs water. Even Waldo, grumpy as he was these days, would put in a word of encouragement that would send her home happy.

But what delighted her most were the times when Lazarus would find a minute to talk to her off stage.

There was an alternating of snow, sleet and rain falling, and the ground being covered with a good coat of snow retarded the fire company from getting out to the fire. LIFE

I did not ask into this world to come,
Nor do I know how long shall be my stay.
I've heard the music of the stirring drum,
I've seen the children romping at their play,
I've seen red tulips springing from their soil
And shared with men and women much of toil.

Some things of life I've missed, as all men must,
But pain and hurt and happiness and song,
Heart-ache and heart-ease, just man and unjust,
I have encountered as I've trudged along.
I've seen the countless stars that light the sky
And the white clouds of summer drifting by.

The pain of living is the price I've paid
For all the days of gladness I have known,
For the devoted friendships I have made
And all the blossoms in my garden grown.

And I would live again, again to die,
So rich a life as mine has been to buy.

"Snakes and poison! Bats and bones!
I will turn you into stones," screamed the Wicked Water Witch as the touch of the Magic Purple Weed dear Uncle Lucky changed from a frog back into his natural shape. You remember, I'm sure, all that has gone before. How the little rabbit had found this magic weed and also, had rescued the poor little boy from the clutches of the Wicked Water Witch. And now, just as all these troubles were over, a new danger threatened them.

"Fairy Queen, dear Fairy Queen, seeing what had happened to her

Send the little Black Man.
The dreadful Wicked Water Witch Is using her baneful ban."

cried Silver Heels, the little donkey, in a loud bray. The next instant the little Black Man appeared, his bright silver sword gleaming in the darkness like a shaft of moonlight. It glistened so that it made the Wicked Witch close her eyes. And before she could again open them the little Black man had seized her broomstick and broken it into 13 different pieces. Oh, gracious me! What a dreadful screech she gave on seeing what had happened to her broomstick; for without her broomstick, you know, she had very little power. "Be gone!" commanded the little Black Man. "Be gone, else I will cut off your wicked head."

With a scowl, the Wicked Water Witch walked slowly away, back to her hut in the depths of the forest, where she lived for the rest of her life, harming no one. You see, without her broomstick, as I said before, she was just like any old woman.

"Now," went on the little Black Man, turning to the little rabbits, the little boy and friendly donkey, "follow me. I will lead you to a cottage in which you may spend the night." So the little rabbits followed him, hiperty hop; the little donkey trotted after them, taking great care not to shake off the little boy on his back, who had grown so sleepy that he could hardly cling to the little donkey's mane. Pretty soon the little Black Man stopped before a neat cottage and knocked on the door. "Who knocks upon my cottage door?

It's past midnight and nearly four,"

cried a sleepy voice.
"We have brought back your son," cried the little Black Man. Goodness me! On hearing these words the little rabbit was indeed surprised. The next minute the door flew open and out ran a poor woodcutter. Lifting his child from the donkey's back, he kissed him many times. "Mother! Mother!" he shouted. "Our child is here!"

"Come in! Come in!" cried the woodcutter's wife. "You brought back our child. There is nothing too good for you all, although we have but humble fare to offer you."

"Farewell!" cried the little Black man, and disappeared. Silver Heels lay down to rest beneath a tree and the two little rabbits hopped into the cottage. And there we will leave them until your Uncle Dave has time to write the next story.

Demand For Vicks Supplies

Good Index to Spread of Flu

An interesting sidelight on the present influenza epidemic has been the accuracy with which the demand for Vicks VapoRub reflects the flu situation in various parts of the country. Vicks' external treatment which proved so effective in 1918.

Last November, rush orders from the Pacific Coast for more and more Vicks were received. As the flu moved east, sudden increase in the demand for Vicks marked its spread from state to state. Now that influenza has become fairly general it is once more necessary, in spite of vastly increased capacity, to run the Vicks laboratories all night long, as the public now demands over 375,000 jars every 24 hours.—adv.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

I WONDER!

I AM not so sure but that the spirits of Elizabeth and Robert Browning moved about in a small New York book auction room the other evening as the first poetic effort of Elizabeth Barrett sold in its first state for nearly $20,000.

I wonder what that royal pair of lovers and singers of poesy would say, could they now come back to life and make just one comment?

It is doubtful, during the lifetime of either of these writers of poetry, if either ever had so much as $20,000. But a lover of rare and beautiful things was willing to pay this amount just to take this little item home with him and love it!

And it was a very art-loving Mr. Johnson, who used to make millions out of Victor photographs records, who paid the huge sum of $150,000 for the original manuscript of "Alice In Wonderland."

Very intelligent people have tried to figure out why such great sums are paid for these precious documents, but I can see no reason why they should not be worth whatever one is willing to pay for them—even as hundreds of thousands are paid for great works of art! Why shouldn't a great work of Heart bring as great a sum—in its original form, as first conceived and brought out for the judgment of the world?

I wonder why people are willing to pay so much for rare and precious things—which in their day were passed unnoticed. Yet, so far as I am able, I do the same thing! I guess it's just paying tribute to neglected greatness, or something of that sort.

I like to pause on Tremont Street in Boston while I take a walk through the old cemetery there, and also in New York city, lower Broadway, where some of the pioneers of America are buried. Here are graves that are literally worth, in the aggregate, millions of dollars. But people some how rarely give this fact a thought. Rather do they have a feeling of pride and pass these graves with a sense of reverence in their hearts.

We do not question so many things when we remember that we are all very, very human—no matter what our station in life, or our fortune.

IN MEMORIAM In sad but loving remembrance of our dear wife and mother, Jennie Tawney, who departed this life, five years ago today, January 25, 1924.

The month of January again is here, To us the saddest of all the year. For just five years ago today Our precious mother was called away.

Dearest mother, thou hast left us, Just five years ago today, But we hope and pray to meet you, In that better world to stay.

Some may think we have forgotten When they see us smile, But little do they know the heart-ache That we suffer all the while.

The midnight stars are shining Upon her silent grave, While sleepeth without dreaming Our loved one we could not save.

Farewell, dear mother, oh farewell, 'Tis hard to give thee up, But what a comfort God has given, We all can meet again in Heaven.

By her husband,
WILLIAM TAWNEY, AND CHILDREN.

Stomach Disorders
First Revealed by Coated Tongue

Your tongue is nothing more than the upper end of your stomach and intestines. It is the first thing your doctor looks at. It tells at a glance the condition of your digestive system—and physicians say that 90% of all sickness starts with stomach and bowel trouble.

A coated tongue is a danger signal of those digestive disorders which lead to so many kinds of serious illness. It tells why the least exertion tires you out; why you have pains in the bowels, gas, sour stomach, dizzy spells.

Coating on the tongue is a sign that you need Tanlac—the medicine which has helped thousands who were physical wrecks from stomach and bowel troubles—who had "tried everything" in vain and about given up hope.

Tanlac contains no mineral drugs; it is made of barks, herbs and roots. Get a bottle from your druggist today. Your money back if it doesn't help you.
